3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Marvelous Source Material!By JorgeThis review is of the soft cover version as that is what I received, but, for content purposes that is of no consequence. This book was prepared for the exhibition "Faberge: The Imperial Eggs" October 22, 1989-January 7, 1990 organized by the San Diego (California) Museum of Art and made possible by a gift from the Hibben Fund of the San Diego Community Foundation and the subsequent exhibition at the Armoury Museum, State Museums of the Moscow Kremlin, January 30, 1990-March 15, 1990. Of the several books available detailing the Faberge Imperial Eggs this book is more complete than most as it contains pictures, details, provenance and the most expansive listing of the Eggs in chronological order including the ones that have been lost and are known only by photographs. This book is already somewhat outdated. It must be noted that the Forbes collection, nine eggs and other Faberge pieces, were an important part of this exhibition. In early 2004 the Forbes collection was sold to Russian Industrialist, Victor Vekselberg for an estimated $100 million and subsequently returned to Russia for exhibition. And in 2014 one of the missing or lost eggs, the 1887 Third Imperial Egg containing a Vacheron Constantin watch was found and identified. It was purchased by London based jeweler Wartski on behalf of an unidentified private collector. Wartski displayed the Egg for four days after the purchase. Then it was withdrawn. Presently it is not displayed.
